

ABOUT THE LAW REVIEW AT GEORGIA STATE UNIVERSITY'S COLLEGE OF LAW:

The Georgia State University Law Review is a legal journal published four times a year by second and third-year Georgia State University law students who have demonstrated outstanding writing and academic skills. The staff of the Law Review edits and publishes articles written by scholars, practitioners and students.

The fall issue features an annual legislative review known as the Peach Sheets. This review provides the legal community with an in-depth view of the Georgia General Assembly's activities and the legislative intent behind significant bills. The fourth book in the series includes scholarly articles from the speakers of the spring symposium.

Students at the Georgia State University College of Law become members of Law Review by invitation based on exceptional academic standing or performance in a rigorous annual writing competition. Law Review participation provides an intensive educational experience beyond the basic law school curriculum by enhancing analytical, organizational and writing skills. These qualities are highly respected by members of the legal community and are regarded as essential to the successful practice of law.

The overall theme is based around both international and domestic aspects of modern intellectual property law. The topics will include such concepts as intellectual property and its involvement in international human rights, software and computer patents in Europe, software and computer patents in the United States, art-related issues in intellectual property, and challenges that new information technologies are posing for public policy and traditional legal regimes both in the United States and across the globe.

Symposium speakers include a number of intellectual property experts from around the U.S. and the world, offering thought-provoking presentations on IP law. The keynote speaker is Pamela Samuelson, a professor at the University of California at Berkeley with a joint appointment in the School of Information Management and Systems and the School of Law.
